A Tale of Two Sisters: Pryor & Trischman in Yellowstone in the Best and Worst of Times

By Robert V. Goss ..... 2

Two sisters operated a pioneering concession in Yellowstone National Park. Their story is filled with triumph and tragedy, including the suicide of their mother and the murder of their brother. They weathered adversity and finally sold the operations and retired. Their story describes the "ups and downs" of concessions in the Park.

Ridgway Glover, Photographer

By Paula Richardson Fleming..... 17

Glover, a Philadelphia photographer, came West in the middle 1860s where he was killed by Indians near Fort Phil Kearny. Did he make photographs in the area? Fleming reveals long-lost examples of Glover's work and postulates that other of his photographs may be out there somewhere.

Target Practice and Firing Ranges at Fort Fred Steele

By Mark D. Hanson .....24

Soldiers during the frontier period were required to practice marksmanship. Hanson reveals the possible locations of firing ranges at one of Wyoming's frontier military posts, Fort Fred Steele. He argues that target practice on the frontier required similar materials and facilities as practice elsewhere in the 19th century military.
